Foreword to the Fables

Wersja polska

English version

Your task is to print "Foreword to the Fables" - a poem by Ignacy Krasicki. But You have to shorten it as much a possible - the shorter the code is, the better.

No Input

Output

There was once a young man whose temperance never flagged; There was an old man, too, who never scolded or nagged; There was a rich man who shared his wealth with the needy; There flourished an author, for renown never greedy; There was a customs man who did not steal; a cobbler who shunned alcohol; A soldier who did not boast; a rogue who did not brawl; There was a politician who never thought of self; There was a poet who never put lies on his shelf. -No, you'll never convince me that that's the right label! -Nevertheless, I will call all of that a fable.